On the home page you can see a list of games currently on the web site. Each game listed has some basic information about the game, such as the games name, game state and number of players currently registered to the game. If you are logged in, you can see more information about a game by clicking on the games name. To login or create an account, see the next chapter.

After having clicked on a games name, you are taken to a game detail page. Here you will find four information buttons, 'Game Description', 'Players info', 'Rules' and 'Map'. In this stage of HvZ's early access the latter two buttons have no functionality. The 'Game Description' button is selected by default, in addition to the information already displayed on the home page, it now also displays the id of the game admin and a list of names of players currently registered to the game. Also, if the game status is 'Registration', there will be a 'Join Game' button. Currently pressing this button results in a pop-up message confirming that the button has been pressed alongside the games id. However, be aware that this does not actually register you for the game, as this is yet to be implemented in a later release of HvZ. Finally, pressing the 'Players Info' button hides all information except the names of the registered players.

While creating a game is not possible in the early access version of HvZ, some elements of game creation are in place. From the home page, pressing the 'Create New Game' button takes you to a new page where the scaffolding for creating a game is in place. Filling out a game name and a description in the 'Input 2' box and then pressing 'Create Game' will prompt a pop-up message with the information that was typed in. As the development of HvZ progresses, pressing the 'Create Game' will actually create a new game and assign you as the game administrator.
